sistance which are afterward to be re-tracted or explained away. Lord Clar-endon could, therefore, last evening meet the questions of an Opposition Peer with entire equanimity. His answer was sim-ple, and as far as British interests and credit are concerned, satisfactory. Lord

Cadogan, after some prefatory remarks, asked whether her Majesty's Government had made an offer of mediation, either alone or in concert with the Emperor of the French and the Emperor of Rus-

"But my lords," said the foreign Secretary, significantly, "we have stood alone, and alone we could do nothing against the determination that war is the most effective means—the only effective means—of accomplishing an ambitious policy." LATE EUROPEAN NEWS. Prospects of a War-What is said in England-An Alliance Between France, Italy and Prussia. Paris Cor. (May 8) London Times. The words spoken by the Emperor o Sunday, in his speech to the Mayor of Auxerre, will have reached you by the telegraph before this. What the telegraph will not tell you is the effect produced by those words in Paris. How they will be interpreted in England I do not know; but it would be difficult indeed to exag-gerate the dismay, and, I must add, the indignation they have roused here. That indignation was yesterday so strong as to throw the most cautious, the most timid, off their guerd. People who have thind, off their guera. Feeple who have been ruined, people who are desperately struggling to escape the ruin which is hanging over them, and people who, till now, yielded a large belief to the pacific intentions of the Government, and did not scan too nicely what appeared amious in the It is in reply to M. Thiers' speech, and to the enthusiastic reception it met with in the Legislative Body, that the Emperor trumpets to the world his detestation of "those treaties of 1815 which it is desired to now make the basis of our foreign policy." These words strike upon the ear like the first notes of defiance to Europe. They are the revenge taken upon the commercial, bourgeois classes, whose hopes of peace are so cruelly dissipated. They are the answer to the educated and intelligent populations of the great towns for their opposi-tion to official nominees in the last elec-tions. They sound like a declaration of war against the enlightened classes, for it is not among them, the Emperor says, he can "breathe freely;" and it is not among them, but among the workingmen and the peasants, that he finds the true genius of France. All who are ealight-ened and independent feel themselves now branded as unworthy the name of Frenchmen, and virtue and patriotism must henceforth be looked for only among the lowest in the social scale and the most ignorant. These are now given to understand that their interests and those of the bourgeoise are far from identical, and what a decla-ration of the kind, coming from such authority, may eventually lead to they hesitate to define. There are rumors of resignations of Ministers, whether true or false does not, perhaps, much matter. I have reason to believe that the Ministers had not any knowledge of what the Emperor was going to say to the laborers of Auxerre, and that they are as districtly turned and soized the man I much taken by surprise as the public at large. Twice on Thursday evening the Emperor had an account given to him by a confidential person, of the manner mained unburt, with the exception of a sight contrain. His cluthes were also by a confidential person, of the manner in which M. Theirs' speech was received in the Legislative Corps; and he was particular in inquiring as to whether those who applauded were in the major-ity. He could hardly believe it when assured repeatedly that the House was ananimous in its approbation. He re-

This may be denied in Italy, but I have it from too good an authority to doubt. Unfortudrel" overleaped everything gentlemanly and decent, and advanced his infamous nately the arbiter of the continent speaks only to spread dismay on every exchange by some doubtful utterance. What he may do none can tell; what he is doing is plain to every beholder. His is a case where inaction is interference. The whole world is beginning to think that opinions and proposals to him. Since returning home I have learned that this colored man, so worthy of respect, closed his baroer-shop, placing on the door a card, saying, "Closed in mem-ory of the death of Stonewall Jackson, and of the Confederate dead." some great scheme of European change has been formed, which is to be effected by a war, and Austria is to be the first victim. If they are wrong, they may be set right in a day. Napoleon has only to disclaim complicity with the designs of his neighbors, and Europe will be once more tranquil; public waste and private ruin will be checked, at least for a time.

Mr. Editor, such fidelity, such reverence and patriotism, drew tears from my eyes; and as Lomax Smith passed me, I felt that no one elicited more of my respect than he.

The Russian Romance.

Of all the romantic stories in the Arabian Nights, there is none more extraor dinary than the little episode that has just occurred at St. Petersburg. You will have noticed that an attempt was to look on the saddest spectacle that the world has seen in our time. If the ac-counts we receive be correct, Lord Clarendon's estimate of a million men in arms falls very far short of the truth. Prussia has placed five army corps in her central and south-eastern provinces made to shoot the Emperor, which was frustrated by the prompt action of a young man who stood near the would-be assassin. That young man, acting from a momentary impulse in arriking down on a war footing, and four more in other parts of her territory, the whole amounting to 365,000 men. Reserves, which may be called out at any moment, would add 210,000 to this force, or that the Prussian army, in case of war, may be the arm he saw raised against his sovereign, was afterwards so frightened at his own rashness that he ran away as fast as his legs could carry him. He was pursued and brought back to the presence of the Emperor, at whose feet he threw himself in a state of terror, as if he had made to reach the enormous number of 575,000 men. On the morning of the 2d instant an order to place all the Austrian been the assassin himself. The Emperor armies on a war footing was issued, and 630,000 men will soon be under arms. The lev es of Italy will probably amount to 400,000 men. The minor German powers have considerable armies. Such are the forces about to be marshaled in raised him, embraced and kissed him, and proclaimed him a Russian noble from that hour. The romance of the story is this: The new Russian noble, only five minutes before, was a poor illiterate drudge in a small hatter's shop in St. Petersburg. A week ago his habita and daily occupation were of the most vulgar and menial character. To-day he hardly bear comparison with that which threatens us. Germany had not half this number of men in the field when she ranks with the most ancient nobility of the empire. A subscription was at once set on foot to provide him with means to sustain his new dignity, and presents are flowing in upon him from every direction. His photograph is displayed in every shop window, prayers are said for him in all the churches, and a retinue of the Czar's own servants are in constant at-At this momentous crisis in the affairs of Europe, it is well that the position of the British Government should be strictly defined. Though the sympathies of his country are with Italy, not one voice has been heard in favor of an aggressive war on her part, and certainly no British statesmen has suggested or would encourage attack on the Oppdrilatoral. So tendance upon him. And this great change has come upon him simply be-cause, doubtless, he impulsively seized an arm he saw holding a pistol, and thus diverted the shot from its intended destination.
